Trauma Management Therapy

Chaplains provide comfort and solace every day to individuals who have experienced trauma, but how often do we think about the impact of that work? Helping people through traumatic events, over and over again, can itself be traumatic, and the professionals who do this work are particularly susceptible to suffer the effects of Posttraumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD).

Those who suffer with PTSD may re-experience traumatic events through intrusive thoughts, dreams or flashbacks, and it's common for them to avoid activities, places or people that remind them of those events.

PTSD can have a devastating impact, but it can also be treated, and at UCF RESTORES that treatment is having unprecedented success.

Chaplains are exposed to traumatic events and stress on a regular basis.

Stress in the Chaplaincy

A recent study exploring work-related stress in the chaplaincy demonstrated considerably higher levels of stress-related physical impairment in that profession than in the general population.

How is PTSD Treated?

Successful treatment is based on a scientific process known as extinction. Imagine you have a fear of dogs. If dogs are avoided, the fear becomes stronger, but if you come into contact with dogs (in a controlled manner), the fear will decrease (or extinguish).

Traumatic events are more complicated but are treated in much the same way. Under the guidance of clinical professionals at UCF RESTORES, repeated exposure to thoughts or images of traumatic events reduces fear and anxiety.

We do this through individualized exposure therapy that incorporates virtual reality to re-create traumatic events as accurately as possible, greatly increasing the effectiveness of PTSD treatment.

Trauma Management Therapy also includes a group program which helps participants learn to deal with the anger, depression, sleep problems, and social isolation that often accompany stress and trauma. Following treatment, 76% of first responders no longer meet the diagnostic criteria for PTSD, an unmatched success rate that points to the effectiveness of this unique approach.

How can I participate in this program?

The program is available to chaplains in the community whose lives have been impacted by traumatic events. If you are suffering from PTSD or trauma-related symptoms, you may benefit from this comprehensive treatment program.

The IOP program is now best described as a two-week program with an optional third week, depending on needs. It is administered in an intensive outpatient format (typically two or three weeks of daily treatment) or outpatient format (typically one or two visits per week).

While there is no charge for taking part in this treatment program, participants who reside outside the state of Florida will be responsible for their own housing.

Feelings of isolation and detachment from others are aspects of PTSD.

Who can you call?

If you have experienced a traumatic event, please call to schedule a confidential phone interview with our Clinical Care Coordinator at 407-823-3910.
